Philosophical ethics in reproductive medicine

Proceedings of the First International Conference, Leeds, 18-22 April 1988
D. R. BROMHAM, M. E. DALTON and J. C. JACKSON eds

This conference brought together doctors, scientists, philosophers, theologians, lawyers, paramedics and representatives of relevant patient support groups to discuss the ethical problems that surround reproductive medicine today and to promote multidisciplinary input into the political and social debate.

In dealing with the contentious ethical problems that currently concern our society and parliament, this work is important to those in many professional disciplines seeking to resolve the inherent ethical dilemmas.

ETHICAL CRITERIA IN PATIENT SELECTION

John F. Kilner

When there are too few resources to provide life-saving technological advances to every patient who can benefit from them, how can we decide who should receive organ transplants, intensive care, or newly developed drugs? John F. Kilner here examines a variety of patient-selection criteria and assesses them according to a full range of ethical arguments, providing a valuable resource for both health care professionals and students of ethics. 344 pp. £27.50

This journal provides a focus for philosophical research with a direct bearing on areas of practical concern which are capable of being illuminated by the critical analytical approach characteristic of philosophy, and by direct consideration of questions of value. These areas include law, politics, economics, science-policy, medicine and education, but are not confined to these. The journal, published under the auspices of the Society for Applied Philosophy, aims to foster and promote philosophical work which is intended to make a constructive contribution to problems in these areas and to the identification, justification and discussion of values capable of transcending narrow or local interests.
